It's almost crash time for China's falling space station Tiangong-1. As school bus-sized space station began what should be its last day in orbit today (April 1), experts weighed in on the possibilities of space debris – and whether this situation should have happened in the first place.

Tiangong-1 is expected to re-enter Earth's atmosphere sometime between Sunday evening and early Monday, according to the European Space Agency. The latest forecast from the non-profit Aerospace Corp. pegged the space station crash at 8:30 p.m. EDT tonight (0030 GMT Monday, April 2), give or take 1.7 hours. But the time of the re-entry – along with the geographic area – is still highly volatile as Tiangong-1 continues its descent.

"We know that Tiangong-1 is tumbling, or at least it was when Germany took a radar update, so the question is it still tumbling, and is the tumbling getting faster or slower," Andrew Abraham, a senior member of Aerospace's technical staff, told Space.com in an interview at 7 p.m. EDT Saturday (March 31) when the group released its latest forecast. He noted that the time of re-entry keeps getting pushed into the future, so the window of uncertainty remains large. As the re-entry time approaches, the range of re-entry times will narrow. it is unclear how much debris will make it down to the surface.

Here's why you can feel perfectly justified skipping the iPhone X and getting the iPhone 8 or iPhone 8 Plus instead:

- Both the iPhone 8 and iPhone 8 Plus boast bigger and faster camera sensors — just like the iPhone X — to deliver richer colors, faster autofocus and better low-light performance. The iPhone 8 Plus' dual lenses are so great
- Apple is forcing users to use new gestures on the iPhone X. You swipe up to return to the home screen, or swipe up and hold briefly to riffle through open apps. The iPhone 8 and iPhone 8 Plus have more familiar controls that won't force you to learn anything new.

- 6) Which one is the best title for the passage? (5 pts.)
- a) Why not to buy iPhone X.
- b) Let's buy a new smart phone.
- c) Changing your phone.
- d) iPad or iPhone?
- 7) What do you think about this two iPhone comparison? (Min 30 words, 5pts.)
