Passage 1

Supertasters

- (1) When you taste a dish, are you good at recognizing the different flavours? Can you tell which ingredients are in a sauce, or which spices are in a curry? If so, you might be a 'supertaster'.
- (2) According to scientists, people taste food differently: it depends on the number of taste buds on your tongue. If you have a large number of taste buds, things taste stronger. People who can taste things very well are called supertasters. Taste researchers divide people into three groups: Non-taster (about 25%), Medium tasters (about 50%), and Supertasters (about 25%).
- (3) Many professional chefs are supertasters. Also, supertasting is more common in women than men, and more common in Asia, Africa, and South America than other countries.
- (4) However, being a supertaster is not all good news. Supertasters often find common food too bitter, sweet, or spicy. So for example, coffee, some alcoholic drinks, and dark green vegetables like spinach can taste too bitter; cake and ice cream can be too sweet, and chilli peppers too hot.
- (5) Recent research has shown that supertasting brings some health benefits. Supertasters can be slimmer than non-tasters because they don't like eating very sweet food. Also, smoking is less common in supertasters because of the strong taste of tobacco. On the other hand, there are downsides to being a supertaster as you may avoid eating certain healthy vegetables and fruit.
- (6) You can find out if you are a supertaster by looking in the mirror and counting the number of bumps on your tongue.
