Part I Reading and Understanding

Please read the article and choose the best answer (10 pts.):

Have you ever been to the beach? Did you see a man with a headset pointing a long pole at the ground? If so you might have seen a person using a metal detector. People use these devices to find metal.

Metal detectors make magnetic waves. These waves go through the ground. The waves change when they hit metal. Then the device beeps. This lets the person with the device know that metal is close.

The first metal detectors were meant to help miners. They were big. They cost a lot of money. They used a lot of power. And worst of all, they didn't work well. People kept trying to make them better.

Metal detectors got smaller. Now they are light and cheap. They also work better. That is why people bring them to the beach. They can look for rings in the water. They can look for phones in the sand. Metal detectors help them find these things. They usually just find junk though.

Metal detectors also protect people. They help to keep guns out of some places. They are in airports. They are in courthouses. Some schools use them. They help guards look for weapons. Guards use special wands to find metal on a person.

These devices save lives in other ways too. During wars, people plant bombs in the ground. When the war ends, they don't clean up their messes. This is unsafe for the people who live in those places. Others use metal detectors to find bombs. They remove them and help the people.

These devices also make clothes safer. It sounds funny, but it's true. Most clothes are made in big factories. There are lots of needles in these places. Needles break from time to time. They get stuck in the clothes. They would poke people trying them on. They don't though. That's because our clothes are scanned for metal. Isn't that nice? Let's hear it for metal detectors. They make the world a safer place.

The Utes were a First Nations tribe that lived in the Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico areas of the American West. They were a proud and independent people. Life was hard for the Ute until the Spanish came. Their territory covered a lot of rough, rocky land. Hunting was not always good, and hunger was always lurking nearby. When the Spanish came, they dealt with the Pueblo people first. Soon the Pueblo people were trading Spanish goods to other tribes. The Navajo and Apache stole horses first. They immediately recognized the benefits of having horses. When the Utes could, they bought horses. The price was dear though, and sometimes included a child in the bargain. Later, they would also take the animals in raids. With the speed and strength of a horse at his disposal, a Ute warrior could now kill bison with much less danger. He could also move meat farther distances. He could also raid the villages of other tribes. The Ute people prospered with their horses. They became active traders in both furs and native slaves. They sold those people to the Spanish. Their new wealth allowed the people to live closer together, giving their leaders more power. To maintain their position, they became more war-like with other tribes. The Ute made themselves allies of the American government and often served as scouts and trackers. That did not mean they were not on opposing sides during conflicts, though. In 1843, the Mormons began arriving in the Ute lands. A great chief named Wakara welcomed them at first. He thought they might make good trading partners. As the Mormon population grew, they killed much of the local game for food. The Utes began to starve. Then the Utes began to die of European diseases. The remaining natives became angry. The Mormons also interfered with the Ute trading practices with the Spanish. In 1853, a Mormon man killed one Ute and injured two others. Wakara demanded the man be delivered to him. He was refused, and that started the Wakara (Walker) War. The war lasted about ten months and was mainly a series of raids against the Mormons. A peace was reached, and Wakara died less than two years later. The Blackhawk War in Utah is not to be confused with the one in Illinois. The war started in 1865 when a drunken Mormon man and some Ute warriors met over the theft of some cattle. The man made the mistake of jerking the young man, Black Hawk, off of his horse. Threats followed which were carried out. Five Mormon men died and hundreds of cattle were stolen. Starving Ute families filled their bellies with "Mormon beef." Name: edHelper

The young war chief continued his actions until 1867, when Black Hawk made peace with them. Other bands continued raiding and killing until 1872. The last Ute War began in 1879, with the Meeker Massacre. Meeker was the local Indian agent. He was determined to make the Utes in his area become respectable farmers. He even plowed up the race track the natives made for their ponies. That was considered the last straw. Meeker and ten of his men were killed, and his family held hostage for two weeks. People in the area were outraged and forced the local Utes to a Utah reservation after signing a treaty. Eventually, all the Ute people were moved to three reservations.

Head and neck of Dale Russell's Troodon sculpture, from the Natural History Museum, London. Troodon (TROW-oh-don) was a small, meat-eating dinosaur. From the tip of its nose to the end of its tail, it was only about ten feet long. It may have weighed about one hundred pounds. Troodon is classified in the group Theropoda, along with giants like Tyrannosaurus rex and Spinosaurus. Members of this group, known as theropods, were one of the three main groups of dinosaurs. Theropods were bipedal, which means they walked on two hind legs most of the time, were fast moving, had hollow bones, and were the only carnivorous dinosaurs. Theropods were the terrors of the Mesozoic era. Many scientists think that modern birds descended from theropod dinosaurs. Troodon had well-developed hands with three long, clawed fingers on each hand, useful for grabbing small prey. Troodon had the biggest brain for its body size of any dinosaur, so it might have been the smartest dinosaur that ever lived. Troodon means "wounding tooth." It was named for its unique teeth. They had jagged edges on all sides and had very sharp points. Its eyes were very large; some scientists believe this meant that Troodon hunted at night. Troodon lived in North America from about 75 million years ago to about 70 million years ago during the Cretaceous period. Troodon, or Wounding Tooth

When was the last time you had a disagreement with someone? How did it turn out? Being able to resolve conflicts is an important skill in daily life, and people have all kinds of ways to fix problems. For some, talking openly about a problem can fix it. Some conflicts seem unfixable. Have you ever had a disagreement like that? For many people, getting into a fight - or worse yet, a war - is the only way to solve some disputes. Do you agree? One country that's had more than its fair share of conflict and war is Angola. Angola is a country in southwestern Africa. It's a pretty big country with comparatively few people. Angola's population is made up of very distinct tribal and cultural groups, each with very strong feelings about their country. In the late 16th century, explorers from Portugal arrived on Angola's coast. What they found were native Angolan tribes who had strong disagreements and frequent battles. The Portuguese took advantage of the situation and forced many Angolans into slavery. The Portuguese stayed on to rule Angola for about 400 years. Their presence and their rule created problems for the Angolans. Portugal's treatment of Angola got worse and worse until the 20th century. In 1928, a man named Antonio de Oliveira Salazar became prime minister of Portugal. Salazar was a dictator, and he sought to strictly control all of Portugal's overseas colonies, including Angola. Through the Portuguese-led government in Angola, Salazar's regime tried to crush Angola's independence movement. In the late 1950s and early 1960s, the Portuguese government in Angola had opponents arrested and thrown in jail. The Portuguese military restricted travel in and out of Angola. Members of one of the opposition groups, called the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, or MPLA, had enough of the Portuguese government. On February 4, 1961, they raided a prison to free some political prisoners. That event began years of violence in Angola's war for independence. Angola finally got its independence. Portugal had enough of the fighting, so they left the country in 1975. Unfortunately, independence only brought about more violence. Angola's different political groups had strong feelings about how to run their country. Civil war broke out, and it's only been since 2002 that Angolans have experienced any kind of peace. No one can say whether or not Angola would have independence without the war that started in 1961. But the people of Angola remember that day as a national holiday each year on February 4.
