Passage 1

Paralympic swimmer Achmat Hassiem has a special motivation. When he's in the pool, the South African imagines that a great white shark is behind him. The technique obviously works because Achmat won a bronze medal in the 2012 London Paralympic Games, an international sports event for athletes with disabilities.

Achmat lost his leg in a shark attack in 2006. That day, Achmat and his brother Tariq went to the beach to do lifeguard-training exercises. Tariq was in the water when Achmat saw an enormous shark. His brother was in danger. Achmat shouted to their colleagues in their boat, but nobody noticed. Then the great white shark changed direction –it came towards him. The shark got hold of his leg and dragged Achmat further out to sea, away from his colleagues in the rescue boat. While his brother was being saved, Achmat fought for his life, and the shark bit through his leg before his companions eventually rescued him. When they took him to the hospital, the doctors saved his life, but not his leg.

When he woke up in the hospital, Achmat saw his injury for the first time. At first, he felt no pain, but he became very depressed. He used to play sports all the time, and now that seemed impossible. Fortunately, Natalie du Toit, a famous Paralympian, visited him in the hospital and encouraged him to take up competitive swimming. Now he spends hours training for international competitions.

Achmat's life changed in one other surprising way. Today, he travels the world to talk about shark conservation. Together with other victims of shark attacks, he tries to inform people about the problems the animals face. Good-natured as always, he smiles when he says he wants to save the sharks that took his leg.

Passage 2

In May 1883, strange things were happening on the volcanic island of Krakatoa, in Indonesia. Steam was rising from the volcano, and small earthquakes started affecting the region. At first, some villagers on nearby Sumatra and Java held parties when they saw that smoke was rising from the volcano. Others were more concerned.

On August 26, 1883, the volcano erupted again with a series of violent explosions. The next day, a gigantic eruption roared out of the volcano. It was the loudest noise ever heard by modern humans: it was louder than a nuclear bomb. The explosion was so large that people heard it from a distance of 5,000 kilometers away. It destroyed the island of Krakatoa: two-thirds of the land collapsed into the sea, and around 1,000 people on nearby islands were buried under a rain of hot ash.

The eruption on August 27 also generated some of the most powerful tsunamis in the history of the world. The giant waves covered several islands. Some people survived by holding onto trees while huge waves hit their streets and homes, but many buildings collapsed, and whole towns disappeared. Over 30,000 people died as a result of the destructive tsunamis.

The entire planet felt the effects of the eruption. Over the next twelve months, world temperatures dropped by over one degree centigrade. As far away as Britain, people reported strange clouds and unusual light in the evening.

The story doesn't stop there. The volcano continued burning under the water. In 1927, it created a new island, called "Anak Krakatoa" (Son of Krakatoa), which rose out of the sea. The new island is still there between Java and Sumatra, and it's growing all the time.

6. What is the main idea of this passage?
 - a. The eruption of Krakatuo was one of the deadliest volcanic events in human history.
 - b. People living on the island were enjoying the party when the volcano erupted.
 - c. The Krakatuo eruption started on August 26, 1883 and then stopped on the very same day.
 - d. Still, Anak Krakatoa has been burning since 1927.
7. What does the word "It" (paragraph 2) refer to?
 - a. The loudest noise
 - b. A nuclear bomb
 - c. An explosion
 - d. A rain of hot ash
8. What does the underlined word "destructive" (paragraph 3) mean?
 - a. Being positive
 - b. Very large or important
 - c. Ignorant
 - d. Causing great damage
9. What can be inferred from the passage?
 - a. The eruption of Krakatoa caused global disasters.
 - b. The explosion lead to the creation of nuclear bomb.
 - c. The tsunami from Krakatoa eruption still happens nowadays.
 - d. The island of Krakatoa was completely destroyed.

10. Which of the following is NOT the effect of the 1883 volcanic eruption?
