Part III: A Seen Passage (5 items)

Items 31-35: Read the article and answer the questions. (5 Marks)

School with a difference

Every year Bangladesh is hit by heavy rains which cause large floods across the country. At these times life becomes difficult for millions of people who have no electricity or clean water. Many schools in these areas are forced to close. Shidhulai Swanirvar Sangstha is a charity which has provided education to more than 70,000 children with their floating schools since 2002. Each morning a school boat picks up children from nearby villages and when every child is on board, lessons can begin. In some of the lessons children learn about climate change and about protecting the environment. The charity has around 100 solar-powered boats and each one is fitted with a small library, a computer and internet access. The teachers also teach adults how to use the computers.

Each year more than 4,000 of India's poorest children get their education on the platforms of the country's railway stations. The idea for the Train Platform School came from a teacher called Inderjit Khurana. She wanted to do something for the children she met begging on the train she took to work each morning. She knew that without education these children had no hope for their futures, and in 1985, she set up the first school and the school still exist today. Music and drama are among the methods used to teach the children how to read and write. When the children are ready, they can transfer to a full-time school. The schools also provide the children with food and medicine when it is needed. You won't find any books at the West Philadelphia School of the Future in the US. Instead, all students have their own computers and learn on specially designed apps. Teachers don't use traditional whiteboards - they use hi-tech Smart Boards. When the school opened in 2006, both the teachers and the students found it difficult. They didn't know how to use all the technology. Since then the school has improved and these days students get high marks in Maths and reading, making it a very popular school with parents. The people who started the school hope that other schools will follow their example.

Answer the questions in short answers.

31. What happens to schools in Bangladesh during floods?
32. What do children learn about in the floating schools?
33. How do children learn in the Train Platform Schools?
34. What is unique about the West Philadelphia School of the Future?

Part IV: An Unseen Reading (5 items)

Items 36-40: Read the article and answer the questions. (5 Marks)

Electric salt spoon

A battery-powered spoon that makes food taste saltier is now in stores in Japan. It is called the Electric Salt Spoon. It was created by researchers from Tokyo's Meiji University and the Japanese drinks company Kirin. They hope their spoon will help people to cut down on the amount of salt they eat. The spoon sends a weak electric current to the tongue. The current is too weak to be felt. However, it makes salt taste up to one and a half times stronger. This means we can eat food with less salt, but still sense a salty taste. Researcher Ai Sato said: "Japan has a food culture that tends to favor salty tastes. People need to reduce the amount of salt in their food." However, she added that food with no salt is bland and tasteless. Salt is important for our health. However, too much of it can cause cardiovascular diseases, like high blood pressure, strokes, and heart problems. These are the leading causes of death globally. The World Health Organization recommends a daily salt intake of less than 5 grams. In Japan, the average person has around 10.1g of salt a day. That's higher than the average of 8.5g for Americans. In many countries, around 75 per cent of salt in the diet comes from processed foods, and from things like soy sauce. The Electric Salt Spoon costs 19,800 yen (around $99). Kirin hopes to sell a million of them over the next five years. The spoon's developer has also created electric chopsticks. These will go on sale next year.

Answer the questions in short answers.

36. Who helped to develop the spoon besides Tokyo's Meiji University?
37. What does the spoon send to the tongue?
38. How much saltier does the spoon make salt?
39. What diseases were mentioned besides strokes and heart problems?
40. What is the recommended WHO limit on daily salt intake?
