The cold was almost too much to bear, but I 29. I was glad to be on the 30 again when the sun came up. I was lucky to get some great photos of a herd of reindeer on my way home – so it wasn't a complete disaster! In fact, the experience inspired me to become a nature photographer!

Part III: A Seen Passage (5 items)Items 31-35: Read the article and answer the questions. (5 Marks)*FUNNY place names

Around the world, there are lots of names for towns and villages that sound funny in English - for example, Monster in the Netherlands, Egg in Austria and Silly in Belgium.

Here are a few of my favourites.

Accident

In around 1751, George Deakins was offered some land in the US by King George II of England as payment for a debt. 'You can choose a piece of land anywhere in Western Maryland, the king said. Mr Deakins sent two teams of engineers to find the best land, without actually working together. The two teams came back with their maps and to their surprise, they discovered they had chosen exactly the same piece of land. Mr Deakins called it, 'The Accident Tract, and that's how the town got its name. And guess what a perstih from Accident is called: an Accidental!

Welcome to Hot Coffee

In Mississippi, in the late 1800s, you had to travel a long way to take your crops to market and to buy food and provisions. When Levi Davis built a store halfway between Natchez and Mobile, it provided a welcome break. He always offered tired travellers a good pot of hot coffee which he advertised as 'the best coffee around. Soon his store became well known as a place to stop for hot coffee and the surrounding area became known as Hot Coffee, too. In the 1920s, the name Hot Coffee began appearing on maps. Today, you can still see the road signs to Hot Coffee, but maybe it's not really 'the best coffee around' anymore.

Welcome to LOST

There is a little village in Aberdeenshire, Scotland called Lost. (The name comes from the word Losda in Scottish Gaelic.) Visitors loved the name and local road signs were often stolen. In fact, the longest time a sign stayed there was for three months, and the council became so fed up with this that they decided to change the name to Lost Farm. However, the local people complained. 'We're happy with the name, they said. You mustn't change it. So the name wasn't changed and instead the council made the road signs stronger. Now people can't take the signs, but they can still have their photograph taken beside them.

Batman

The Turkish city Batman takes its name from a river and not from the comic book superhero. The river's name was probably inspired by the Bati Raman Mountain. However, there is still a connection with the Batman we've seen on the screen. In 2008, the mayor of Batman said that Christopher Nolan, the director of The Dark Knight, should have to pay money to the city for using the name Batman without permission. There is only one Batman in the world, he said. The American film producers used the name of our city without informing us: Of course, Nolan didn't have to pay, though. It's true that filmmakers can't steal information and ideas, but the name Batman has been around since the character was created in 1939.

31. How did Mr Deakins choose which land to take?
32. Why was Levi Davis's store in a good position?
33. When did the place name Hot Coffee become official?
34. What problem did the village of Lost have?
35. How did the city of Batman probably get its name?

Part IV: An Unseen Reading (5 items)

Items 36-40: Read the article and answer the questions. (5 Marks)

A new year, and the same old life by Alina Kandinsky

Every year, I do the same thing.

1 January arrives and I decide to change my ways and make resolutions. Usually, they're the same ones. I promise that I will give something up (usually chocolate), take up a new hobby, or do better at school.

2 The thing is that New Year's resolutions are not new. About 4,000 years ago, the Babylonians were making promises at the beginning of each year to pay back any money they owed. The Romans used to make promises to the god Janus (that's who the month January is named after), and thought of each January as a new beginning.

3 These days, millions of people are still doing the same. Typical things they promise to do are settle down (or travel the world), start a new career (or retire), or become healthier. The problem is that they struggle with their resolutions for a few weeks, and then give up. Like me, they go back to their usual routine until the next December.

4 According to some scientists, 88% of all resolutions fail. It seems that most of us just can't break our bad habits! Maybe it's because we don't really want to give something up (if I'm honest, I love chocolate too much to stop eating it!). Or, perhaps it's because we often decide how we want our lives to be different without making any real plans for how to do it.

5 My own personal theory is that it's all the Romans' fault! For many of us, January is the coldest and darkest month of the year. It's difficult to find a nice, fresh salad, or go for a healthy run when the weather is freezing and horrible, and you have no energy. It's the worst time of the year to make plans.

6 Perhaps we shouldn't try to change our ways at the beginning of the year.

7 According to one article I read, many people make big life plans when they go on holiday. That's when they're away from their usual habits of home, work and school, and can think more clearly about their lives. It's not so difficult to form good habits in the summer, when you have more energy and feel more positive. So, instead of New Year's resolutions, maybe we should have 'summer holiday resolutions'!

- 36. What is one of Alina's typical resolutions?
- 37. What percentage of New Year's resolutions don't succeed?
- 38. When did people in Babylon start making resolutions?
- 39. What makes it hard to go jogging during January.
- 40. Who is the month, January, named after?
